

PRESIDENTIAL AMBASSADORS

The Presidential Ambassador Program is a student leadership program on New Mexico State University's Main Campus. By providing students with unique skills and training, they will be equipped to help execute special university functions and represent the university at events both on campus and elsewhere. Presidential Ambassadors are students who participate in the University Course 395/495. The class of students will reflect the diverse body of NMSU and are drawn from all academic colleges, programs, and class years.

The ambassador's role will be assisting the University President with alumni relations and stewardship, supporting academic initiatives, promoting new programs, and engaging members of the local business community.

The size of the Presidential Ambassador class will be approximately 15 students. Although the Instructor of Record will be the University President, the Ambassador program will be developed and operated under the control of University Advancement.

The Presidential Ambassador program is an opportunity to showcase NMSU student talent. There is nothing more influential than showing alumni, donors, and business partners that NMSU's caliber of students is exceptional. Alumni and friends of the university love to engage students and hear about their interests, involvement, and aspirations. The powerful rapport that often develops between outside supporters and engaged students is quite remarkable.

The Presidential Ambassador program and its members create a sense of pride on the NMSU campus. This can be a strong selling point on a resume, particularly when employers today are looking for candidates with leadership, management, and social responsibility experience.

Another important student benefit stems from the professional networking opportunities that ambassadors will participate in. These include the chance to foster personal and professional relationships with external donors, school supporters, and business community members. These contacts are an important vehicle for internship opportunities and, ultimately, career employment. Internally, the exposure that comes from interaction with deans, administrators, and faculty can also create a powerful reference base when needed.

Developmental benefits include training in essential areas such as networking, soft skills, and leadership.
